COMPILED ORIGINALLY BY

AND IN SUBSEQUENT EDITIONS

Revised and Enlarged

P R E F A C E .

The present edition of the New Royal Dictionary is a revision and enlargement of the book that has been on the market since 1893. It was originally issued to meet the demand for a somewhat comprehensive and yet inexpensive lexicon on the part of students and others interested in the study of the Hindustani and English languages. That it has met the need is proved by the fact that since the original book was published, edition after edition has been printed, and the demand is now greater than ever before. The compilers acknowledge the help derived from Forbes, Fallon, Platt, Richardson and from vernacular dictionaries, and also the aid given by many munshis, pandits and other Indian scholars.

The following explanation of the diacritical marks employed throughout the book will be of convenience to all who make any extended use of the Dictionary:

a	unmarked — ۱ or ۲	sounded as a in alone.
ā	marked — ۱ or ۲	” ” a in far.
e	never marked — ۳ or ۴	” ” e in they.
i	unmarked — ۱ or ۲	” ” i in pea.
ī	marked — ۳ or ۴	” ” i in machine.
o	never marked — ۵ or ۶	” ” o in note.
u	unmarked — ۱ or ۲	” ” u in pull.
ū	marked — ۳ or ۴	” ” u in rule.

'a' 'i' 'u' — ۷ ۸ ۹ respectively. Their sound is somewhat like above, but very guttural, to be learned only by hearing them used. In some fonts the Roman equivalent for ۷ is marked by a dot under the vowel.

g = ۱۰ the guttural Arabic k; it has no equivalent in English.

kh = ۱۱ the guttural Arabic kā, pronounced as though hawking to clear the upper part of the throat, is similar to Scotch ch in loch or German ch in buch; it has no equivalent in English.

g = ۱۲ the Arabic guttural g, somewhat like the sound of gargling the throat or clearing lower part of throat; it has no equivalent in English.

t = ۱۳ or ۱۴; d = ۱۵, unmarked, are softer than the English letters, nearly as soft as lispings these letters, spoken with the tongue almost between the teeth, somewhat as t in after and d in subdue, where the t and d are slightly held in check by the labials f and b preceding them.

ṭ = ۱۶ and ḍ = ۱۷ are harder than English letters d and t. They are spoken with the tongue turned back in the roof of the mouth in position to trill the letter r. They correspond fairly well to d and t following r in hard and art.

th, dh, ṭh, ḍh, are simply the above sounds, t, d, t, d aspirated; th, ṭh, should never be sounded like th in thin or in this.

n is the sound of ng in ing.

r unmarked is not trilled; it is a gentle sound of r like r in rué.

r marked is trilled; its nearest English equivalent is the r in whir or like the second r in barrel.

The apostrophe following a vowel as a' in such words as fā'ida, simply prolongs the sound of the vowel and introduces the following consonant with sound of short i preceding it, and should be pronounced almost as though written fā-ida; this must not be confounded with the apostrophe representing ۱۸ in some type as explained above.

s = ۱۹ or ۲۰ or ۲۱ all pronounced alike, as s in see, and never has the “z” sound as s in was;—similarly s = ۲۲, ۲۳, ۲۴ all have simple sound of s, as s in zinc.

All other vowels, diphthongs, and consonants are exactly like their English equivalents.

KEY TO THE PRONUNCIATION OF ENGLISH WORDS.

THE consonants employed in the phonetic spelling, with the exception of g, retain their name sounds, and the vowels, unless marked, retain their short sounds. The diphthong au or aw represents the sound of a, as heard in all; ou or ow, that of ow, as in now; and oo unmarked as in book; the short sound of o, as in möön. The sharp sound of th is indicated by common letters, as in thin; the flat sound by small capitals, as in then. The syllabic sound of ble, whether terminal or incidental, is represented by bl. By referring to the following key it will be seen that the notation of long and peculiar vowel sounds is remarkably simple:

Fäte, fär; mē, hēr, mīne; nōte; tūne; möön.
